Gentry Sloan is coming home for the first time in years. After the loss of his father, he has struggled with returning. Now his mom needs his help on the family ranch for what he thinks is just the summer. While he's in town, an unexpected encounter with a trespasser has him thinking he might wanna hang around a while. It's time to face the ghosts that haunt him and put old guilts to rest, but he soon finds out there may not be a way to do that. Ariana Tate is just loving life with no worries. She is a talented and adventuresome photographer who enjoys chasing sunsets and can appreciate the world so much better through her view finder. She isn't really looking for love; she finds happiness with just working and hanging with her friends until she turns around and finds Gentry in her lens. The two fall into an easy friendship of sorts and ride the fence of love, but.... Tragedy strikes, limits are tested, and when what goes up comes down, will they take their shot or let the sun set on what could be their forever?
