Introduction:

David Berkowitz, who became known as the 'Son of Sam', first killed on 29 July 1976. It was the beginning of eight brutal attacks that were to terrorise the residents of New York City for over a year. During the summer of 1977, at the height of the killer's notoriety, the city was in a collective panic. Bars, restaurants and nightclubs, were deserted. To many New Yorkers, it seemed that the NYPD and the Omega Task Force were incapable of catching the serial killer, who shot his victims indiscriminately with a .44 calibre handgun.

Captured in August 1977, David Berkowitz confessed to killing six people and wounding seven others. He subsequently alleged that he was ordered to kill by a demon which possessed Harvey, his neighbour's dog.

Today, David Berkowitz is now committed born again Christian but still languishes behind bars in the Sullivan Correctional Facility, in New York State. It is a maximum-security facility which houses up to 580 inmates; most of whom are incarcerated for committing violent offences, with sixty percent of them serving life sentences.

David Berkowitz is unlikely ever to be released.
