One great revelation I discovered as a result of reading quotes by writers is that they – great and successful writers -- all struggle with their writing. But they have their ways of pushing themselves to get their writings done despite the roadblocks that come their way.

The difference between successful writers and unsuccessful ones is that the former tend to devise their own inspirational strategies to push forward in their writing endeavors, and get things done regardless of the hurdles. The latter group tend to throw in the towel, and give up completely when things don't go as planned for them. Don't let this happen to you. But if you've given up on your writing project already, it's never too late. You can bounce back by starting all over again with full force power.
