Edward Cave (born in 1878) was the editor of the Boy Scouts magazine, Boys' Life.

This book is a useful little manual that has been developed in connection with the early 1900s' Boy Scout movement. Both text and illustrations are based upon the actual experiences of a Boy Scout troop. Questions that arise from such experiences are answered in this book and many suggestions are given for intending campers. In fact, the instructions for camping under all conditions are as explicit as could be desired.

The author writes: "CAMPING out represents the height of liberty. One might even get a pretty fair rhetorical effect by likening the camp-fire to the torch which the figure of Liberty holds on high."
